An adjustment of eighteen years is applied to the calculation of dates in the reigns of the Judean kings, arrived at by allowances for the successive kings dying and acceding in the middle of some years. For instance, if a king died in the middle of a year, would that year be attributed to the reign of the dying king or the entering son? Allowing for this adjustment and recognizing the 1445 B.C. date of the exodus in the reign of Amenhotep (who lost his firstborn son), these eighteen years perfectly fit in secular chronology of the Egyptian kings as well.
